Unless the unexpected happens, the pending government salary legislation apparently isn't going anywhere this year.

Of course, this forecast should be hastily amended to say that it is fool-hardy ever to predict flatly what Congress will or will not do.

There could be some unexpected resurgence on the part of the salary measure. But Congress seems lethargic about the bill, even though it has a chance of being approved by the House.

Even if it should win congressional approval this year, the bill in its present form faces a veto by President Nixon.

The legislation provides for pay raises for federal classified and postal workers next Jan. 1 based on latest Bureau of Labor Statistics figures. Although no one knows what the BLS industry comparability pay figures would be, it's pretty safe to assume the pay increase would be at least 6 or 7 percent.

In addition, postal workers this October would get a two-step pay increase and their automatic in-grade pay raises would be speeded starting next July.

The bill also would set up a semi-automatic annual pay adjustment system for federal classified and postal workers starting next January, complete with a pay arbitration board system.

The administration soon will send up its own proposal for salary legislation. It would not provide for any federal classified or postal employee pay raise until next July, with another increase Jan. 1, 1971, and each January thereafter. There would be an advisory board setup to advise the President and the Civil Service Commission on pay adjustments, but the final decision on pay recommendations to be sent to Congress would be the President's alone. The Congress would have veto power to approve or disapprove the President's recommendations within 30 days.

The lack of enthusiasm on the part of Congress for the government salary bill approved by the House Civil Service Committee was indicated when the Senate Civil Service Committee held a hearing on the legislation yesterday.

Only a one-day hearing was scheduled in order to hear postal employee union leaders, with indications that it would be quite a while before the hearings resumed.

The senators were properly complimentary toward letter carriers and postal clerks and other postal workers and said it was a shame that they didn't get more money. But no one indicated any burning desire to take on the fight for additional pay raises at this time.

One can always sense when a congressional committee means business or when it is merely going through the motions. Unfortunately, the latter was the case yesterday.

ANNUITY RISE — Federal retirees and their survivors will get a 4 percent increase effective Nov. 1, to be reflected in their annuity checks Dec. 1. This was made official yesterday when official Labor Department price index figures rose .4 of 1 percent, making a total 4 percent increase since the last federal annuity adjustment.

The 4 percent annuity increase will be raised to 5 percent if, as expected, the civil service retirement bill becomes law before Nov. 1. This legislation provides for an added 1 percent annuity rise whenever annuities are automatically adjusted on the basis of price index increases.

On this assumption, the 5 percent increase also would apply to present government workers who retire before Nov. 1. They would also receive the benefit of the computation of annuities on a high-three-year average salary plus credit for unused sick leave for greater length of service, which would amount to about a 10 percent increase in annuities. This, plus the 5 percent price index adjustment, would come to about 15 percent for present employees who retire before Nov. 1.

Employees keep asking if the sick leave credit also would boost their high-three-year salary average. It would not. The sick leave credit only increases the total length of service an employee has.

Also, the present computation rate remains the same—1½ percent for the first five years of service, 1¼ percent for the next five years and 2 percent for all years in excess of 10.
